

19/9/1933.

My Dear Dr Langlois,

I know now that Monday is a bad day to call on you. I happened to be in town so looked in on chance, half expecting to find you away. I wanted to ask you whether Mrs Goddough (the wife of the Chairman of Barclay's Bank) had called upon you. She asked me what considered the best Protestant painter. Apparently they are going to have Mrs Goddough's Protestant painted for the Bank. As she called specially to ask my opinion, I wanted to know what she had done. I recommended her to go & see your exhibition in Bond Street & to call & see you. She answered me by saying "Don't you think that John is the best Protestant painter?" I said, yes, if you want a Caricature! It really is remarkable what Press advertisement does! Of course I do not know what has been settled - she may call upon you yet. However, you are as busy as ever. I shall be most interested to see your bust of Buldry - I expect it will be fine. He has a splendid head. You will have thoroughly enjoyed doing it. I mean to go to work in Paris - you will be happy there too. I will look in again after you are all back in London for the winter. I don't go up to town often now.

Yours sincerely
 Robert Royston