ART IN LIVERPOOL.

Important Exhibition at the Walker Gallery.

912

COLLECTION OF FINE PICTURES.

The exhibition to be opened by Sir W. Martin Conway to-morrow at the Walley Art Gallery, Liverpool, adds largedy to the credit first placed to that city's account one hundred and fifty years ago. In 1774. Liverpool inaugurated the first art exhibition ever held in the provinces. The collection then shown was of a curious charactor, the exhibits including a "frame with seven gentlemen's and one lady's portrait in miniature," "A figure with an Urn," and "A head of the Marquis of Granby in human hair."

As already stated in our columns, one of the objects of this primitive Society was. "the assistance of youth in their stradies without any expectation of pecuniary advantage," and over since Liverpool has been a generous patron of the fine and applied arts. We have read of its liberal treatment of the sculptors (among them i Flaxman), who sent in designs in 1806 for a monument to Lord Nelson.

The Liverpool Academy, which existed from 1810 until 1867, was the only official body that supported the Pre-Raphaelite. body that supported the Pre-Raphaelite Movement, and the city's permanent collection includes "Dante's Dream" by Rossetti, Holman Hunt's "Triumph of the Innocents," and "Lorenzo and Isabella," by Millais, while other fine works of art enrich the Walker Art Gallery, many of them having been purchased from the annual exhibitions held therein. Moreover, that Gallery itself, the handsome St. George's Hall and the magnificent Cathedral on the Hall and the magnificent Cathedral on the hill, nobly testify to the munificence of the citizens of Liverpool on behalf of art and

ADMIRABLE PORTRAITS.

The fifty-second Autumn exhibition is one more proof of Liverpool's importance as an art centre. The city's reputation in this respect has enabled the Corporation to bring together as fine a collection of works as we have seen in any annual exhibition of modern art. The United Kingdom is admirably represented, and the Continental Section contains masterly paintings, chiefly by artists of the French School. Careful selection and tasteful hanging add to one's pleasure in passing through the rooms.

Quite a number of the best works have been shown in London, but it is interesting again to see them in a new environment. Some of the pictures even look better in Liverpool than they did at the Royal Academy. This is especially apparent in the case of portraits such as Mr. John S. Sargent's sensitive "Sir Philip Sassoon" (317), Mr. James McBey's charming "Lady Frank" (30), and "H.S.H. the Princess Dilkusha de Rohan" (852), Mr. George Harcourt's excellent "Amaryllis" group (73), Sir John Lavery's vivacious "Pavlova" (85), and "Listening In" (953), by Mr. Philip A. de Laszlo.

The pictures on loan include the late W. Y. MacGregor's massive view of Durham (934), the property of Glasgow Corporation, and "Sir Charles Scott Sherrington" (83) by Mr. Augustus John, which comes from University Club, Liverpool. The Chantrey Trustees send two of their latest purchases. "Apollo and pool. The Chantrey Trustees send two of their latest purchases, "Apollo and Marsyas" (922), by Mr. Henry Morley, and Mr. Sidney Lee's vigorous representation of the Dolomites (865).

NOTABLE LANCASTRIANS.

There are, of course, a considerable number of portraits of shrewd Liverpool people. Mr. John A. A. Berrie, for example, contributes two, one of the "Lady Mayoress of Liverpool" (49) and another of the "Lord Mayor of Liverpool" (64). Both are solidly painted and evidently good likenesses. Mr. Frank T. Copnall's portrait of "Sir Henry Flemming Hibbert, Chairman of the Lancarnati shire-County Council" (363) is also a sound, unationing rendering of a strong personality. Note should be made of a capital portrait of Dr. A. H. Millar, of Dundee (599), by Mr. Henry W. Kerr, and Mr. Howard Somerville's delightful "Silvia, Daughter of Sir Alfred Booth" (310) is sure to be popular. "Lady Mayoress of Liverpool" (49) and (310) is sure to be popular.

(310) is sure to be popular.

But the outstanding portrait of the exhibition is the wonderful "Thomas Hardy" (120) by M. J. E. Blanche, who more significantly than any other artist reveals the mentality of the great novelist. As a contrast we have the same painter's "Misses Savile Clark" (125), which is a work of ineffable charm, and historically entertaining as a study of the coquettish costume of 1892. Other foreign pictures include works by M. A. Guillaume, M. Rochegrosse, Mr. Walter Gay, M. Aman-Jean, Senor Sorolla-y-Bastida, M. Camille Pissarro, and M. Henri Martin. Martin.

ATTRACTIVE WORKS.

Were space abundant one would like to Mi refer to many attractive figure and land-Ar scape subjects as well as sea pieces. A cre few of the more striking of these are Miss on Anna Airy's "Captured" (23), Mr. Hely Li Smith's "April" (27), Dr. R. Anning Bell's "Pont Valentré, Cahors" (51), tio "Daphne" (78), by Mr. Malcolm Gavin, lee "Harvest" (93), by Mr. W. M. Fraser, act "Borth-y-Gest" (94), by Mr. W. Alison wi Martin, "Chiron and His Pupils" (98), tre by Mr. G. Spencer Watson, the beautiful Ur "Near Dalry" (337), by Mr. George Gr (987), by Mr. Charles Sims, the splendid river scene (855), by Mr. Reginald G. of Brundrit, and "On the Trail to Para-" diso" (569), by Mr. Goddard F. Gale.

Wi The water-colour section is distinguished by examples of the art of our best va practitioners in this medium, and there Ar scape subjects as well as sea pieces. A va practitioners in this medium, and there be are dainty miniatures, clever works in ap black and white, and admirable sculpture tre to add to our enjoyment.
